Sarah Lugton (born and raised in Bathurst) creates contemporary abstract paintings from her studio gallery in Williamstown North, land of the Kulin nation. Sarah explores expressionist and abstract styles, describing her process of mark making on canvas as “flowing through her rather than from her”.

The body of work explores the ideas of identity and notions of self, that we are never truly lost, perhaps just displaced. Nostalgia, memories and connections to place are inextricably linked to our sense of self in the world. The work is emotive, gestural brushstrokes with energetic movement, creating layers of intense colour and texture.

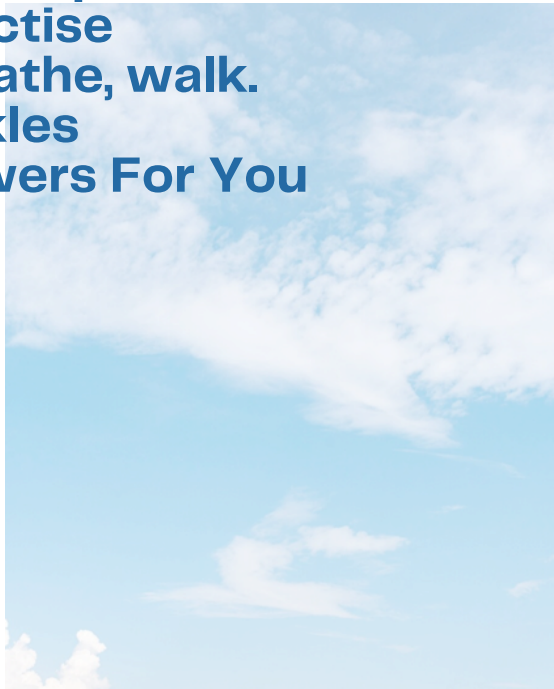

‘Moving forward by looking back: memory, nostalgia and connection to place’ is the art of journaling life in colour. Revealing memories and nostalgia that is site specific to Bathurst as a way of sharing our mutual connection and sense of identity.
